Executive Summary

Voting is a fundamental pillar of democratic governance, ensuring citizen participation and accountability in political processes. In Sri Lanka, the right to vote is constitutionally guaranteed, and its meaningful realization depends not only on legal provisions but also on practical arrangements that ensure all citizens can participate freely, fairly, and without barriers. The Election Commission ensures all citizens can participate freely, fairly, and without barriers. The Election Commission of Sri Lanka plays a central role in safeguarding electoral integrity by ensuring that polling environments are accessible, neutral, and operationally efficient. This study aims to examine the integrity, transparency, and inclusiveness of Sri Lanka's electoral process by ensuring that all polling stations are accessible, neutral, manageable, and finally suitable.

This study was carried out at the request of People's Action for Free and Fair Elections (PAFFREL), which reserved the ownership of the study as well as served as the coordinating body for the research. Established in 1987 as Sri Lanka's first citizen-based election observation organization, PAFFREL was founded by representatives of several national-level civil society organizations and is registered as a Company Limited by Guarantee under the Companies Acts of 1982 and 2007, as well as with the Ministry of Social Services and Social Welfare. Since its inception, PAFFREL has observed all major elections in Sri Lanka and produced post-election reports. Beyond election monitoring, it has actively contributed to electoral reforms, voter education, promotion of democratic values, good governance, human rights, and social cohesion. This study is a result of PAFFREL's ongoing efforts to uphold free, fair and transparent elections through election monitoring and advocating for constructive electoral reforms.

The study aligns closely with the priorities of the Election Commission of Sri Lanka, particularly its mandate to strengthen electoral integrity through evidence-based planning and adherence to international standards. The need for this study arises from increasing recognition that polling station conditions, especially accessibility, neutrality, and manageability, directly influence voter participation, inclusiveness, and public confidence in elections.

Using a stratified multi-stage sampling approach, approximately 1,500 polling stations were selected across ten representative electoral districts, covering urban, rural, and estate sectors. Data were collected through a structured assessment tool aligned with international frameworks, including the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCPRD) and International IDEA guidelines. The study was carried out during the period (1st of June - 18th of August 2025). However, as the data collection was conducted prior to the impact of Cyclone Ditwah (28th November - 03rd December 2025), which significantly altered the infrastructure of the country, there may have been subsequent changes in ground conditions, particularly in areas affected by heavy rainfall, flooding, and strong winds.

The study developed three sub-indices: the Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI), Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI), and Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI), which were integrated into a composite Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) to provide a comprehensive and systematic evaluation framework.

The findings reveal a high overall level of polling station suitability in Sri Lanka, with the majority of polling stations classified as highly suitable. Accessibility levels are generally strong, although moderate challenges remain in estate and geographically difficult areas. Political and environmental neutrality is maintained at a very high level, reflecting effective institutional safeguards and regulatory mechanisms. Manageability conditions are also satisfactory overall, though some districts particularly urban and high-density areas show moderate operational constraints that require attention.

Despite these positive outcomes, the study identifies localized disparities, particularly in districts such as Colombo and Gampaha, where relatively higher proportions of moderately suitable polling stations indicate the need for targeted improvements. A small number of marginally suitable polling stations further highlight the importance of addressing infrastructure gaps and operational limitations at specific locations.

The study emphasizes the importance of adopting a data-driven and institutionalized approach to electoral planning. The Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) provides a practical decision-support tool for the Election Commission to identify gaps, prioritize resource allocation, and guide improvements in polling station infrastructure and management. Continued collaboration between the Election Commission and PAFFREL, along with sustained investments in accessibility, operational readiness, and monitoring mechanisms, will be essential to further strengthen the inclusiveness, efficiency, and credibility of Sri Lanka's electoral processes.

In conclusion, Sri Lanka demonstrates a strong foundation in ensuring suitable polling environments for democratic participation. However, targeted, evidence-based interventions and institutional coordination remain critical to achieving uniform standards and enhancing voter confidence across all regions.

Overall, while polling stations in Sri Lanka are largely suitable, targeted improvements particularly in moderately and marginally suitable locations should focus on enhancing accessibility, strengthening basic infrastructure, and sustaining political neutrality. In parallel, improving operational readiness through the provision of essential facilities and systematic pre-election audits will further enhance the manageability of polling stations. Institutionalizing the PSSI and adopting district-specific interventions will support more inclusive, efficient, and evidence-based electoral planning.

Accessibility

Accessibility refers to the physical ability of voters to reach and enter polling stations safely and conveniently. This dimension considers factors such as distance from transportation points, road conditions, terrain, building accessibility, and facilities for elderly persons and persons with disabilities. Accessible polling stations are essential to ensure equal participation opportunities for all eligible voters (ACE Electoral Knowledge Network, 2012; International IDEA 2002; United Nations Development Programme, 2019).

Neutrality

Neutrality reflects the degree to which the polling station environment remains politically impartial and free from undue influence or intimidation. Indicators under this dimension examine the proximity of polling stations to political party offices, previous campaign activities in the vicinity, ownership neutrality of polling locations, historical reports of intimidation, and contextual factors that may affect voter confidence in the impartiality of the polling environment. Maintaining neutrality is critical for safeguarding voter freedom and ensuring electoral integrity (International IDEA, 2016; Pippa Norris, 2014).

Manageability

Manageability assesses the operational readiness and infrastructural capacity of polling stations to conduct election activities efficiently and securely. This includes the structural condition of buildings, availability of electricity and ventilation, safe storage facilities for election materials, and the availability of basic operational support for polling staff, such as accommodation, water supply, sanitation facilities, and security arrangements. Well-managed polling stations are essential for minimizing operational disruptions and ensuring smooth election administration (ACE Electoral Knowledge Network, 2012; International IDEA, 2016; United Nations Development Programme, 2019).

Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI)

A composite index that measures the ease with which voters can physically reach and access polling stations, based on weighted indicators such as distance, transport availability, and disability access.

(Brady & McNulty, 2011; Dyck & Gimpel, 2005)

Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI)

A weighted index that assesses the extent to which a polling station environment is free from political influence, bias, or intimidation, ensuring independent voter decision-making.

(OSCE/ODIHR, 2010; ACE Electoral Knowledge Network, 2012)

Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI)

An index that evaluates the operational efficiency and administrative capacity of polling stations, based on factors such as space, staffing, and crowd management.

(ACE Electoral Knowledge Network, 2012)

Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI)

A composite index that integrates accessibility, neutrality, and manageability using weighted scores to determine the overall suitability of polling stations.

(UNDP, 2016; IFES, 2014)

1. Introduction

Voting is one of the most fundamental expressions of democratic citizenship, serving as the primary mechanism through which citizens participate in governance and hold political leaders accountable (Burden, Canon, Mayer, & Moynihan, 2014; Leighley & Nagler, 2015). In Sri Lanka, the right to vote is both a civic responsibility and a constitutionally guaranteed entitlement for every citizen age 18 years and above. The Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka recognizes the franchise as a cornerstone of democratic participation and good governance. The Election Commission of Sri Lanka further affirms that each elector has the legal right and moral responsibility to cast a vote freely, fairly, and without intimidation or discrimination.

Voting decisions shape the composition of governments and influence the policies that govern social, economic, and political life. However, electoral choices are influenced by a range of psychological, social, political, and environmental factors that affect individual decision-making processes. Understanding these influences is therefore essential for explaining patterns of voter behaviour and the functioning of democratic systems (Kulachai, Lerdtomornsakal, & Patipol, 2023).

The meaningful realization of voting rights depends not only on legal guarantees but also on practical arrangements that ensure equal access to the electoral process. In this context, the location, condition, and neutrality of polling stations are critical dimensions of electoral integrity. Polling stations must operate as safe, accessible, and impartial environments that enable all eligible citizens, including persons with disabilities, older persons, women, and residents of geographically remote areas to exercise their franchise independently and with dignity. Research has consistently shown that greater distance and travel time between a voter's residence and their designated polling place can significantly reduce voter turnout (Dyck & Gimpel, 2005; Gimpel & Schuknecht, 2003; Gibson, Kim, & Cho, 2013; Brady & McNulty, 2011; Newman, Johnson, & Lown, 2014; Cantoni, 2015).

International human rights and electoral integrity frameworks reinforce these obligations. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD, Article 29) requires States Parties to guarantee the political participation of persons with disabilities through accessible voting procedures and facilities. Similarly, guidelines from the OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (OSCE/ODIHR), the Carter Center, and the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (International IDEA) emphasize accessibility, neutrality, and operational efficiency as essential elements of free and fair elections.

Evidence from global studies further highlights the importance of regularly assessing polling station conditions. For example, a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) accessibility audit in Moldova found that fewer than one percent of polling stations were fully accessible to persons with disabilities (UNDP, 2018). A study in the United Kingdom similarly reported that nearly seventy percent of polling stations exhibited at least one accessibility barrier (Scope, 2016).

In Sri Lanka, polling stations are predominately located in government schools, religious institutions, and other public buildings. However, rapid urbanization, demographic transitions, and uneven infrastructure development across districts highlight the need for systematic evaluation of these facilities. As the guardian of electoral integrity, the Election Commission of Sri Lanka recognizes that ensuring accessibility, neutrality, and manageability of polling stations is essential for safeguarding the universal franchise and strengthening public confidence in elections.

Against this backdrop, this study evaluates polling stations across ten selected electoral districts of Sri Lanka, focusing on accessibility, neutrality, and manageability, and provides evidence-based recommendations to enhance the inclusiveness and effectiveness of future electoral processes.

2. Objectives of the Study

2.1 Overall Study

The overall aim of this study is to strengthen the integrity, transparency, and inclusiveness of Sri Lanka's electoral process by ensuring that all polling stations are accessible, neutral, manageable, and suitable. This aligns with the Election Commission's ongoing efforts to uphold democratic principles through evidence-based decision-making and adherence to both national and international standards for electoral management.

2.2 Specific Objectives

1. Select a representative and stratified sample of 1,500 polling stations across electoral districts

This objective aims to ensure geographical, demographic, and socio-political diversity in the study sample, capturing a comprehensive picture of polling station conditions across urban, rural, and estate sectors. The list of all polling stations for the year 2024 was obtained from the Election Commission and used as the sampling frame for selecting the sample.

2. Assess accessibility according to UNCRPD and international standards.

The study evaluates each polling station's physical and environmental accessibility for persons with disabilities, older persons, and other vulnerable populations, guided by the principles of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD). This includes assessing access routes, ramps, signage, lighting, and the general ease of movement for all categories of voters.

3. Examine political and environmental neutrality

Neutrality is a critical component of electoral integrity. The study assesses whether polling stations are free from undue political, religious, or cultural influences, and whether their physical placement and surrounding environment provide a fair and impartial setting for voting. Factors such as proximity to political party offices, places of worship, or security-sensitive locations are evaluated to determine the level of neutrality.

4. Evaluate manageability in relation to voter density, logistics, and infrastructure

Manageability focuses on the administrative and operational aspects of polling stations. This includes the adequacy of space, facilities for polling staff, crowd control feasibility, voter flow, and the capacity to handle emergencies. The manageability assessment also examines risks of overcrowding and logistical constraints, particularly in high-turnout areas.

5. Evaluate the suitability of polling stations

This objective aims to assess the overall suitability of the sampled polling stations by examining key dimensions of accessibility, neutrality, and manageability. Suitability is evaluated based on whether polling stations provide equitable access to all voters, maintain a neutral and unbiased environment free from political influence, and possess the necessary infrastructure and operational capacity to ensure the smooth conduct of elections. This assessment enables the identification of gaps and disparities across polling locations and supports evidence-based recommendations for improving electoral service delivery and ensuring inclusive, efficient, and credible election processes.

6. Provide policy guidelines and recommendations

This objective seeks to formulate evidence-based and policy-relevant recommendations to improve the performance and standards of polling stations nationwide. It emphasizes strengthening accessibility, neutrality, and manageability, while enhancing overall suitability to support free, fair, and inclusive electoral processes.

7. Develop an atlas of Accessibility, Neutrality, Manageability, and Suitability Indexes

This objective aims to produce a comprehensive, visually accessible atlas that presents the spatial distribution and comparative analysis of the Accessibility, Neutrality, Manageability, and Suitability Indexes. The atlas will integrate geospatial mapping, statistical summaries, and index-based classifications to support evidence-based planning, policy formulation, and decision-making. It will serve as a practical tool for identifying disparities, prioritizing interventions, and enhancing the overall efficiency and inclusiveness of service delivery systems.

3. Methodology

This section addresses objective one, which is the selection of a representative and stratified sample of 1,500 polling stations across electoral districts. The methodology for selecting a representative and stratified sample of 1,500 polling stations across electoral districts was designed to ensure a systematic, evidence-based, and replicable assessment of polling station suitability nationwide. It adopts a quantitative approach to capture the multifaceted nature of polling station conditions, with particular emphasis on accessibility, neutrality, and manageability. The research process integrates representative sampling, field-based data collection, and a structured analytical framework, with the Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) serving as the core assessment tool.

3.1 Data Collection Framework

The study employed a structured data collection framework to ensure consistency, comparability, and reliability across all sampled polling stations. A standardized observation checklist and assessment tool were developed based on internationally recognized guidelines, including the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCPRD), International IDEA, and other electoral integrity frameworks.

Data collection was carried out through trained enumerators who conducted on-site assessments of each polling station. The instrument captured quantitative and qualitative indicators across three core dimensions: accessibility, neutrality, and manageability.

A stratified multi-stage sampling approach was adopted to ensure that the sample represented the geographical, socio-economic, and political diversity of Sri Lanka. Ten electoral districts Colombo, Gampaha, Nuwara Eliya, Galle, Vanni (Combined Mannar and Vavuniya administrative Districts) , Trincomalee, Kurunegala, Polonnaruwa, Moneragala, and Ratnapura were selected to represent all major provinces and a mix of urban, rural, and estate settings.

Within each district, polling stations were randomly selected from the official Election Commission list of 2024 Presidential Election, to yield a total of 1,500 stations, ensuring proportional representation based on district voter population. The sampling framework also considered topographical diversity (coastal, hill-country, and dry-zone areas), population distribution, and accessibility variations.

This approach allowed the study to capture both high-density urban constituencies and remote rural polling stations, ensuring that findings could inform national-level policy as well as district-level operational planning.

3.2 Sample Frame

Coverage of the Sampling Frame

The sampling frame covers all 25 electoral districts, based on information obtained from the Election Commission of Sri Lanka. It includes all electoral divisions within each district, as well as the polling stations within each division.

Method of Sample Selection

Given the need for a scientifically sound and representative sample, the methodology adopted for the selection of polling stations incorporates the following key steps:

- Randomized Sampling: To maintain fairness in the selection process, a random selection method was employed. 10 major electoral districts were selected in the first stage using random sampling. For each district, a subset of polling divisions was also randomly chosen.
- Limitation on polling Divisions per District: Three polling divisions per district were selected primarily (As proposed by the PAFFREL) to reduce operational costs through clustering of the sample, while also addressing logistical and management challenges associated with deploying field staff across widely dispersed locations within each district. This approach ensured more efficient supervision, streamlined coordination, and improved overall feasibility of field operations without compromising the representativeness of the sample.

3.3 Process of Selection

- For each district, the polling divisions were identified and sorted by the number of polling stations in each division.
- A maximum of three polling divisions per district was imposed to ensure geographical diversity and to avoid overrepresentation of any single district. This limit was not a fixed requirement but rather an upper threshold, allowing flexibility in implementation.

Accordingly,

- Three polling divisions were selected in districts with larger geographical spread or higher internal variation (e.g., Colombo, Gampaha, Galle, Ratnapura).
- Two polling divisions were selected in districts where,
 - The total number of polling stations was relatively smaller, OR
 - A smaller number of divisions adequately captured the district's distribution (e.g., Vanni, Trincomalee, Polonnaruwa, Kurunegala).

3.3.1 Final Selection

Step 1

Once the random selection was completed, the total number of polling stations across all selected polling divisions was verified to ensure the final tally of 1500 polling stations. The final selection includes a combination of polling stations from urban, rural, and estate areas to ensure all geographical regions across Sri Lanka, which ensures that the study's results are applicable to the entire country.

Step 2

To allocate a total of 1500 polling stations across the 10 districts based on the number of polling stations in each polling division within the district, we followed a proportional allocation method. This approach ensures that the allocation respects the relative size of each polling division within a district.

1. Total Polling Stations in Each District

- For each district, the total number of polling stations is known, which is the sum of the polling stations in the respective polling divisions.

2. Proportional Allocation Formula

- The proportional allocation for each polling division within a district is calculated by taking the following steps:
 - First, calculate the proportion of polling stations in a particular polling division within the district.
 - Then, multiply this proportion by the total number of polling stations to be allocated to that district.

The formula used is:

Allocated Polling Stations for Division = (Number of Polling Stations in Division / Total Polling Stations in District) X (Total Polling Stations to be Allocated in District)

3. Rounding

- After calculating the allocations, we rounded the results to the nearest integer because the number of polling stations must be an integer. This ensures that each polling division receives a realistic number of polling stations.

4. Total Allocation Check

- The sum of all allocated polling stations across districts must add up to the desired total (i.e., 1500 polling stations). If rounding causes slight deviations, adjustments are made to ensure the total is exactly 1500.

3.4 Sample Distribution

A Random sample was obtained from 10 electoral districts, and subsequent 24 polling divisions. Table 01 summarize the polling divisions selected from each district and the corresponding number of polling stations.

Notes:

- 1. Rounded Values: The final values in the "Allocated Polling Stations" column are rounded to the nearest integer after calculating the proportion for each division.
- 2. Adjustments: If the total of allocated polling stations across all districts did not add up to 1500 (due to rounding), adjustments would be made to the final district allocations.
- 3. Proportionality: This method ensures that each polling division receives several polling stations proportional to its original share of polling stations within its district, maintaining fairness in the allocation process.

3.4.1 Distribution of Polling Stations by Province

The sample polling stations represent all nine provinces. The highest proportion of polling stations is from the Western Province (23.1%), while the lowest proportion is from the Northern Central Province (6.8%). This distribution broadly reflects the variation in the total number of polling stations across provinces, where more populous and urbanized provinces, such as the Western Province, have a higher concentration of polling stations compared to less populated provinces.

The majority of polling stations are located in rural areas (67.5%), followed by urban areas (29.8%), while only a small proportion is located in estate areas (2.6%). This distribution reflects the predominantly rural settlement pattern of the country, with comparatively fewer polling stations in estate sectors

The Sample polling stations span across selected 10 electoral districts and 24 corresponding polling divisions. The highest proportion of polling stations is observed in the Gampaha District (13.41%), followed closely by Polonnaruwa (13.02%) and Kurunegala (11.15%). In contrast, the lowest proportion is recorded in the Trincomalee District (6.77%), followed by Vanni (7.93%). The distribution reflects variation in the number of polling stations across districts and indicates a balanced representation of both highly populated and less populated districts within the sample. Each district includes selected polling divisions to ensure geographic spread and diversity in the sampling framework.

The majority of polling stations are located in government schools (68.47%), indicating their central role as primary venues for election activities. Religious institutions also contribute notably, with Buddhist temples accounting for 15.60%, while Christian churches (1.23%) and mosques (0.06%) represent smaller shares. Community centers constitute 8.83% of polling locations, reflecting their importance as accessible public spaces. Other types of locations, including private buildings, cooperative buildings, cultural centers, temporary locations, and miscellaneous venues, together account for a relatively small proportion. Overall, the distribution highlights a strong reliance on public educational institutions and community-based facilities for conducting polling activities.

3.4.3 Distribution of Polling Stations by their electoral districts

An overwhelming majority of polling stations (99.8%) are located within their respective polling districts, indicating a high level of administrative accuracy and effective electoral planning. This reflects a well-organized system where polling stations are appropriately aligned with electoral boundaries, ensuring ease of access and clarity for voters.

Only a very small proportion (0.2%, representing 3 polling stations) are located outside their designated polling districts. These cases are limited to Mullaitivu(1station) and Vavuniya (2 stations), demonstrating that such deviations are extremely rare.

The reasons for these exceptions are context-specific rather than systematic. One instance is due to the Weliyapya area, which is administratively part of Mullaitivu but falls under the Vauniya electoral district, creating a boundary mismatch. Another case is associated with a newly established Mahaweli development zone, where rapid settlement expansion may not be fully aligned with electoral demarcations.

Overall, the findings confirm that the distribution of polling stations is highly consistent and geographically appropriate, with only minimal deviations arising from administrative boundary complexities and recent development interventions rather than weakness in the electoral system

3.5 Data Quality Assurance and Study Limitations

This study was carefully designed to maintain a high level of data quality, although some practical limitations were encountered. The questionnaires and checklists were developed in line with the guidelines of the Election Commission of Sri Lanka, in collaboration with PAFFREL Sri Lanka. The sampling frame was prepared using information from the 2024 election, and the selected sample was discussed and finalized with both the Election Commission and PAFFREL. Following approval, the fieldwork was coordinated through PAFFREL.

A structured survey questionnaire was developed and refined through several consultations with the Election Commission to ensure that it met both national requirements and accepted international standards. Enumerators were provided with training to familiarize them with the study objectives, tools, and data collection procedures. Given that the study used a nationally representative random sample, enumerators had to travel across all districts in the country to collect data.

In practice, some challenges were encountered during data collection. The process took longer than expected due to field-level issues such as difficulty in locating certain polling stations and changes in administrative divisions (e.g., GN divisions being reassigned). Since the study was conducted outside the election period, some locations were not fully operational at the time of data collection.

To maintain data quality, completed questionnaires were regularly checked and reviewed at the central level to identify and correct inconsistencies. Standardized tools and definitions were used to ensure consistency across districts.

However, certain limitations should be noted. While the study design, sampling framework, and methodology were developed under the guidance of the project consultant, field-level decisions were managed by the field teams. In some cases, practical adjustments such as substituting polling stations, clustering, or minor changes in allocation were made based on ground realities. These were not always carried out in direct consultation with the methodological lead.

As a result, although every effort was made to ensure consistency and reliability, the consultant does not assume responsibility for unverified field-level changes that may have slightly affected the final sample or implementation. Additionally, minor differences in total counts (for example, between 1,500 and 1,551 polling stations) may have occurred due to rounding, inclusion of active polling stations, and clustering practices. These variations are small and are unlikely to affect the overall findings, but they should be considered when interpreting detailed results.

In addition, the survey was conducted during the period of 1st of June to 18th of August 2025, and there may have been changes in ground conditions since then. Furthermore, the Cyclone Ditwah (28th November - 03rd December 2025), which brought heavy rainfall, flooding, and strong winds, has affected certain areas of the country and may have permanently altered the condition and accessibility of some polling stations as well as the infrastructure and the buildings which have been used as the polling stations.

Therefore, it is necessary to revisit the polling stations prior to the next election to ensure that they continue to meet the required standards.

4. Data Analysis

The index framework used in this study is aligned with internationally recognized standards and methodological approaches. The construction of the Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI), Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI), Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI), and the composite Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) is guided by globally accepted frameworks. These include the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD), which provides standards for accessibility; the International Foundation for Electoral Systems (IFES) Election Access Observation Guidelines (2014); the European Union Election Observation Mission recommendations on polling environment and neutrality; and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) composite index methodology, particularly the Human Development Index approach.

The key principle underlying this framework is that multidimensional electoral conditions should be measured using composite and standardized indices to ensure a comprehensive and objective assessment.

Data were collected using different measurement techniques depending on the nature of each variable. These included binary recording (Yes/No) for the presence or absence of specific features, ordinal scaling to capture varying levels or conditions, and nominal categorization for classifying qualitative attributes. All variables were subsequently transformed into a standardized 0–1 scale, ensuring that no single variable dominates the index due to differences in measurement scales and allowing for a balanced contribution across dimensions.

Weights were assigned to each dimension based on theoretical importance (literature-based evidence), operational relevance (field realities), and international electoral guidelines. Accordingly, the Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) was constructed using the following weights: Accessibility (0.50), Neutrality (0.125), and Manageability (0.375). This weighting structure reflects the relative importance of each dimension, where accessibility is prioritized due to its direct impact on voter participation, neutrality is essential for maintaining electoral integrity and public trust, and manageability ensures the smooth functioning of election-day operations. All weights sum to 1.00, satisfying standard scientific requirements for composite index construction.

Accordingly, the study adopts a composite index approach to systematically evaluate polling stations by integrating the three key dimensions: Accessibility, Neutrality, and Manageability. These are measured through PSAI, PSNI, and PSMI, respectively, and combined to form the composite PSSI, providing a comprehensive measure of overall suitability.

This standardized and integrated approach enhances comparability across polling stations, ensures objectivity in assessment, and supports evidence-based decision-making in electoral planning and management.

4.1 Accessibility of Electoral Integrity

This section addresses objective 2, which is to assess accessibility according to UNCRDO and international standards. Accessibility is recognized as a fundamental democratic right, particularly under the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD), which highlights the obligations to ensure equal access to voting by removing physical, procedural, and attitudinal barriers (United Nations, 2006). Complementing this, the International Foundation for Electoral Systems (IFES) provides operational guidance through its election access observation frameworks, emphasizing standardized assessment of polling station infrastructure, location, and usability (IFES, 2018). These frameworks are further supported by the principles of Universal Design, which advocates for the creation of environments accessible to all individuals regardless of age or ability (Marce, 1998). Together, these international standards provide a strong conceptual and empirical justification for the development of the PSAI as a tool to systematically assess and improve polling station accessibility.

4.1.1 Data Processing and Normalization

Prior to index construction, all variables collected through the Polling Station Assessment Tool were cleaned, validated, and standardized to ensure comparability across polling stations. Missing values were reviewed and treated using appropriate imputation or exclusion criteria, depending on the nature and frequency of the data gaps.

Given that indicators were measured using different scales (binary, Nominal, and ordinal), normalization procedures were applied to transform all variables into a common scale ranging from 0 to 1. This ensured that no single indicator disproportionately influenced the composite index due to differences in measurement units. For negatively oriented indicators (e.g., barriers or constraints), reverse coding was applied so that higher values consistently reflected better accessibility outcomes. This standardization process ensured methodological consistency, comparability, and robustness in the construction of the Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI).

4.1.2 The Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI)

The Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI) is grounded in international normative frameworks and theoretical principles that emphasize inclusive electoral participation. In this study Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI) is a composite measure developed to assess the accessibility of polling stations using five key dimensions: Location Accessibility, Vehicular & Parking Accessibility,

Building Accessibility, Environmental Safety & Infrastructure, and Overall Perceived Accessibility. The PSAI adopts a weighted linear aggregation approach, similar to that used in the Human Development Index (HDI), to combine multiple dimensions into a single composite score (United Nations Development Programme, 2024). This approach enables the systematic integration of diverse components such as physical accessibility, environmental conditions, and user perceptions into standardized and comparable measures. By applying explicit weights to each dimension, the index ensures a transparent, methodologically sound, and replicable framework for assessing overall polling station accessibility. Each dimension is constructed from multiple indicators derived from the Polling Station Assessment Tool and normalized so that weights within each dimension sum to one. The overall PSAI score is calculated using a weighted aggregation:

$$PSAI = 0.4L + 0.10V + 0.3B + 0.10E + 0.10O$$

This formula indicates that the overall accessibility score of a polling station is derived by combining five components, each representing a different aspect of accessibility.

- L (Location Accessibility- 0.40): This receives the highest weight because external access, such as road connectivity, terrain, and proximity, is the first and most critical barrier voters' encounter. If a polling station is difficult to reach, other improvements become less meaningful.
- B (Building Accessibility – 0.30): The second highest weight reflects the importance of internal accessibility, including entrances, ramps, pathways, and the ability to move within the polling station. These factors directly determine whether voters, especially those with disabilities or mobility limitations, can vote independently.
- V (vehicular & Parking Accessibility- 0.10): This captures the availability and usability of parking and vehicle access, which is increasingly important for elderly voters and those requiring assisted transport.
- E (Environmental Safety & Infrastructure- 0.10): This dimension accounts for safety conditions and the availability of essential infrastructure (eg. Lighting, sanitation), ensuring that voters can access the polling station without risk.
- O (Overall Perceived accessibility – 0.10): This reflects the user's overall experience and perception of accessibility, complementing objective measures with a subjective assessment.

Overall, the PSAI provides a balanced and systematic way to evaluate polling station accessibility. Higher weights are assigned to the most critical barriers (location and building), while supporting factors (vehicular access, environment, and perception) ensure a comprehensive assessment. A higher PSAI score indicates a more inclusive and voter-friendly polling environment. (See annexure 2 for further information about weighting)

This index allows systematic comparison of polling stations and helps identify accessibility gaps that may affect inclusive voter participation. The weighting scheme applied in the Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI) is based on the relative importance of different dimensions of accessibility, combining conceptual relevance and practical influence on voter access. Greater weights are assigned to variables that directly determine physical access and usability, particularly within building accessibility, where internal mobility features (such as ramps, steps, and pathways) receive higher emphasis due to their critical role in enabling inclusive participation. Location accessibility variables are distributed more evenly to reflect multiple external factors influencing reachability, while slightly lower weights are assigned to secondary environmental and navigational conditions. Vehicular and parking accessibility prioritizes availability over supporting features, recognizing the increasing reliance on assisted and private transport. Environmental safety and infrastructure weights emphasize essential operational conditions required for safe access. Finally, perceived accessibility is equally weighted to capture user experience alongside objective measures. Overall, this weighting structure ensures a balanced, transparent, and policy-relevant assessment aligned with international accessibility frameworks and composite index methodologies.

4.1.3 Reliability and Internal Consistency

To ensure the robustness of the Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI), internal consistency of the composite indicators was assessed. The grouping of indicators within each dimension was evaluated to confirm that they collectively measure the intended construct of accessibility. Table 7 exhibits the classification of Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI) Scores.

Table 4.1.1: Classification of Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI) Scores

Accessibility Category	PSAI Range
High Accessibility	0.80- 1.00
Moderate Accessibility	0.60-0.79
Low Accessibility	0.40- 0.59
Poor Accessibility	0.00-0.39

4.1.4 Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI) Score

Table 8 presents the distribution of polling stations across ten selected electoral districts according to their level of accessibility, categorized as High, Moderate, Low, and Poor Accessibility.

Overall, the findings indicate that polling stations are highly accessible across all districts, with a total of 1,224 out of 1,545 polling stations (approximately 79.2%) falling under the High Accessibility category. This suggests that the majority of polling locations are well-positioned in terms of ease of access for voters, likely considering factors such as road connectivity, location convenience, and physical access.

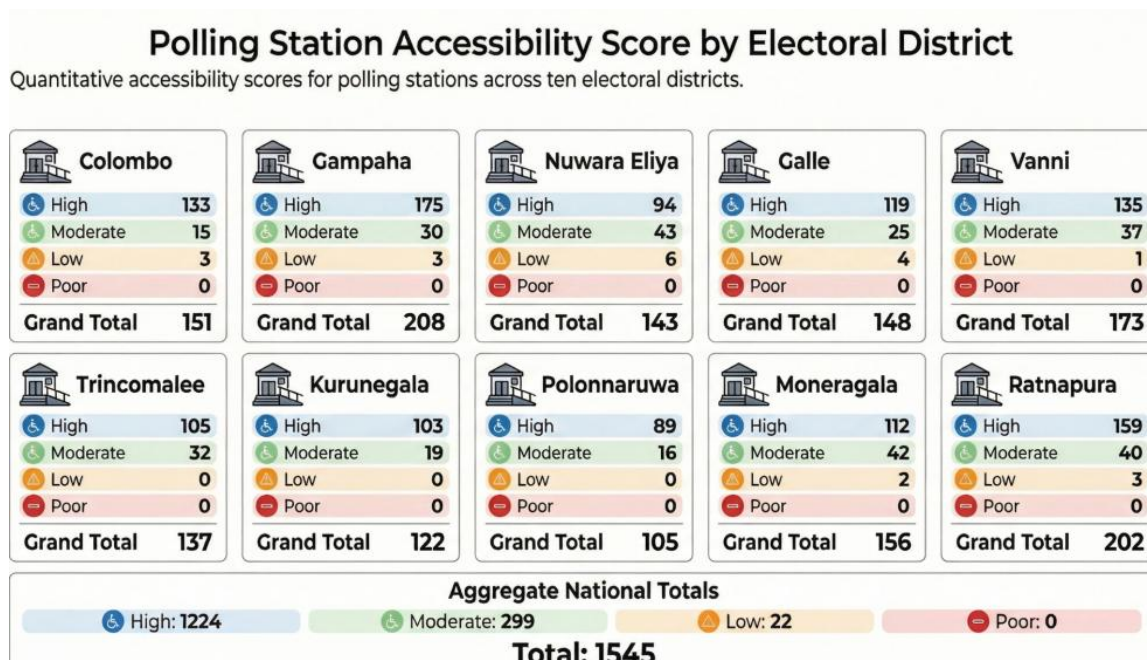

A smaller proportion, 299 polling stations (about 19.4%), are classified as having Moderate Accessibility. These stations may present minor challenges for voters but are still generally reachable without significant difficulty.

Only 22 polling stations (around 1.4%) fall into the Low Accessibility category, indicating that very few locations may pose notable access constraints. Importantly, no polling stations are categorized under Poor Accessibility across any district, reflecting a strong overall standard in polling station placement and planning.

At the district level, Gampaha (175), Ratnapura (159), Colombo (133), and Vanni (135) report the highest numbers of highly accessible polling stations, consistent with their larger number of polling locations. Meanwhile, districts such as Nuwara Eliya and Moneragala show relatively higher counts of Moderate Accessibility stations (43 and 42 respectively), which may reflect geographical or infrastructural challenges in these areas.

Further analysis reveals important spatial and sectoral variations in polling station accessibility. While overall accessibility levels are high, moderate accessibility is more prevalent in geographically challenging regions, particularly in estate and rural sectors characterized by difficult terrain, limited infrastructure, and dispersed populations.

In summary, Table 8 further demonstrates a generally favorable accessibility profile of polling stations across all selected districts, with minimal disparities and no critically inaccessible locations, supporting equitable voter participation.

4.1.5 Policy Implications of Accessibility Findings

The findings indicate that Sri Lanka has achieved a relatively high standard of polling station accessibility, which is a positive reflection of institutional commitment to inclusive electoral processes. However, the presence of moderate accessibility levels in certain areas highlights the need for targeted improvements rather than uniform policy responses.

1. Improving last-mile Connectivity

Policy attention should focus on improving last-mile connectivity, enhancing infrastructure in rural and estate areas, and upgrading partially accessible facilities to fully compliant standards.

2. Temporary measures during polling day

Investments in ramps, signage, lighting, and accessible sanitation facilities can significantly improve usability for persons with disabilities and older voters. Furthermore, the PSAI framework provides a practical tool for the Election Commission to institutionalize periodic accessibility audits and prioritize resource allocation based on evidence.

3. Formalizing pre-poll audit by the GN

Recommend formalizing pre-poll audit by the GN conducted by the ECSL to incorporate customized needs of each polling station (the need of a shuttle threewheeler service and its frequency, need of wheelchairs etc.)

4.2 Political and Environmental Neutrality

Political and environmental neutrality are fundamental conditions for ensuring free, fair, and credible elections. A neutral polling environment safeguards voters from undue influence, intimidation, or coercion, thereby enabling individuals to exercise their franchise independently and confidently. International electoral standards emphasize that polling stations must be located and managed in a manner that minimizes exposure to political campaigning, security pressures, or socially influential institutions that could affect voter behavior (International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance, 2014).

The concept of political neutrality extends beyond the absence of political actors within polling premises to include the surrounding environment. The proximity of political party offices, campaign activities, or prior incidents of intimidation can shape perceptions of electoral integrity and potentially discourage voter participation (United Nations, 2005; (European Commission, 2016). Similarly, environmental neutrality considers contextual influences such as the presence of religious institutions or security installations, which may unintentionally create psychological pressure or perceived bias among voters, particularly in sensitive or post-conflict settings.

In the context of Sri Lanka, ensuring neutrality is particularly important given the country's diverse socio-political landscape and past experiences with electoral tensions. Establishing polling stations in neutral, accessible, and non-intimidating locations is therefore critical for maintaining public trust in the electoral process and upholding democratic principles.

This section addresses Objective 3 of the study by examining the level of political and environmental neutrality of polling stations through a structured index-based approach, enabling systematic assessment and comparison across electoral districts.

In this context, the study assesses whether polling stations are free from undue political, religious, or socio-environmental influences, and whether their physical placement and surrounding context provide a fair, impartial, and secure setting for voting. Neutrality is examined not only within the polling premises but also in relation to the external environment that may shape voter perceptions and behavior.

Key factors considered include the proximity to political party offices, the presence of campaign or propaganda activities, and any history of political intimidation associated with the location. In addition, the study evaluates the influence of places of worship and the proximity to security-sensitive locations such as armed forces installations, which may create psychological pressure or perceived bias among voters. By incorporating these dimensions, the analysis provides a comprehensive assessment of polling station neutrality, ensuring alignment with international standards and supporting the broader objective of maintaining transparency, fairness, and public confidence in the electoral process.

4.2.1 Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI)

The Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI) is constructed to evaluate the degree to which polling stations operate in politically neutral environments free from intimidation, partisan influence, or institutional pressure. The Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI) is a composite measure developed to assess the extent to which polling stations operate within politically neutral and non-influential environments. The index captures key dimensions of neutrality by examining factors that may directly or indirectly influence voter behavior, compromise electoral fairness, or create conditions of intimidation.

The index incorporates six indicators related to:

- Proximity to political party offices
- Presence of campaign propaganda offices near polling stations
- Neutrality of privately owned polling premises
- Past incidents of political intimidation
- Potential influence arising from religious locations
- Proximity to armed forces installations

The PSNI is calculated as a weighted composite index:

$$PSNI = 0.15P + 0.15C + 0.1O + 0.30I + 0.15R + 0.15A$$

Where:

- P = proximity to political party offices (0.15)
- C = campaign propaganda presence nearby (0.15)
- O = neutrality of ownership of polling location (0.1)
- I = previous political intimidation incidents (0.3)
- R = perceived religious influence on voters (0.15)
- A = proximity to armed forces installations (0.15)

Higher index values indicate greater neutrality of the polling station environment, while lower values indicate potential risks of political influence or intimidation.

4.2.2 Weighting Structure

The weighting structure of the PSNI reflects the relative severity and potential impact of different neutrality risks on voter behaviour. The highest weight is assigned to prior incidents of political intimidation (0.30), recognizing its direct and historically grounded influence on voter confidence and participation. Other factors such as proximity to political offices, campaign presence, religious influence, and security installations are assigned moderate weights, as they contribute to indirect or perceived pressures.

This weighting scheme is designed to balance objective risk factors with contextual influences, ensuring that the index captures both observable and latent threats to electoral neutrality in a transparent and policy-relevant manner.

Table 4.2.1: Classification of Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI) Scores

Neutrality Category	PSNI Range
High Neutrality	0.80-1.00
Moderate Neutrality	0.60- 0.79
Low Neutrality	0.40- 0.59
Poor Neutrality	0.00-0.39

Table 4.2.2 presents the distribution of polling stations across selected electoral districts according to their level of neutrality, as measured by the Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI).

Overall, the findings indicate a very high level of political and environmental neutrality across polling stations. Out of a total of 1,548 polling stations, 1,430 (approximately 92.4%) are classified under High Neutrality. This demonstrates that the vast majority of polling stations are located in environments free from significant political influence, intimidation, or contextual pressures that could affect voter behavior.

A comparatively small proportion, 117 polling stations (about 7.6%), fall within the Moderate Neutrality category, suggesting the presence of minor neutrality concerns in certain locations. However, these are not substantial enough to significantly compromise the overall electoral environment. Notably, only one polling station (0.1%) is categorized under Low Neutrality, and no polling stations fall into the Poor Neutrality category, reflecting a strong overall standard of neutrality across all districts.

At the district level, several districts demonstrate near-perfect neutrality conditions. Moneragala records 100% of its polling stations under high neutrality, followed closely by Polonnaruwa (98.1%), Trincomalee (94.2%), Kurunegala (92.7%), and Nuwara Eliya (93.7%), where only a very small number of stations fall into the moderate category.

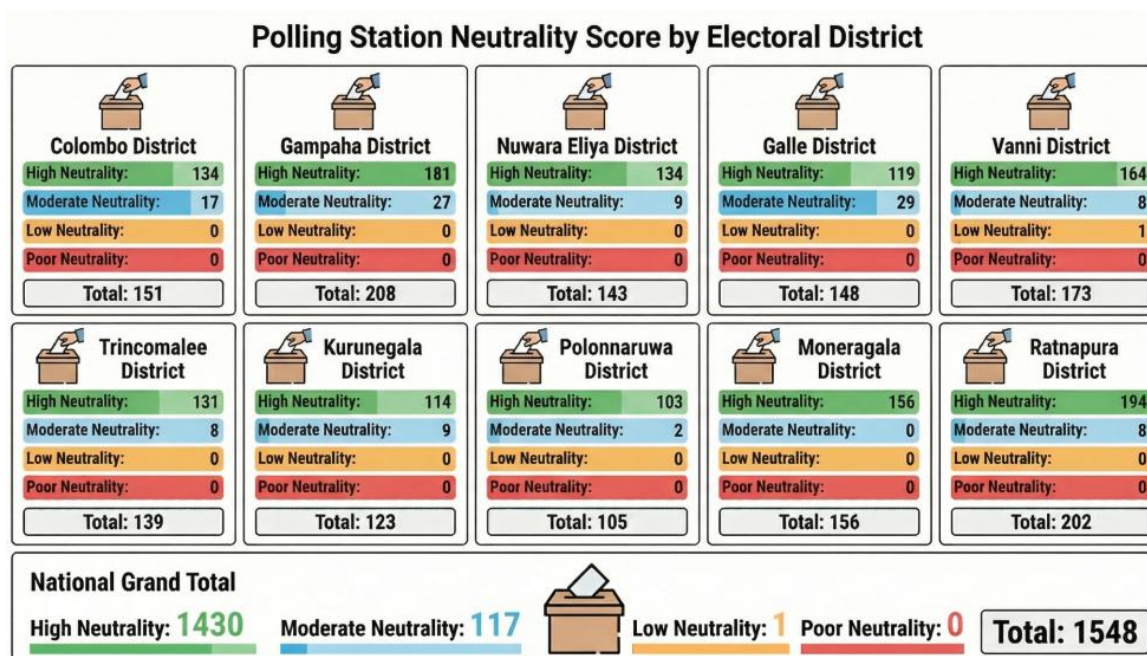

More urbanized and densely populated districts such as Colombo and Gampaha also show strong neutrality, with 88.7% and 87.0% of polling stations classified as highly neutral, respectively. However, these districts, along with Galle, record relatively higher numbers of moderately neutral stations 17, 27, and 29 respectively, which may reflect greater exposure to political activities and institutional presence in such areas.

The Vanni district is the only district where a polling station is categorized under Low Neutrality, although the overall distribution still remains highly favorable, with over 94% of stations classified as highly neutral.

Table 4.2.2 : Polling Station Neutrality Score by Electoral District

Electoral District	High Neutrality	Moderate Neutrality	Low Neutrality	Poor Neutrality	Grand Total
Colombo	134	17	0	0	151
Gampaha	181	27	0	0	208
Nuwara Eliya	134	9	0	0	143
Galle	119	29	0	0	148
Vanni	164	8	1	0	173
Trincomalee	131	8	0	0	139
Kurunegala	114	9	0	0	123
Polonnaruwa	103	2	0	0	105
Moneragala	156	0	0	0	156
Ratnapura	194	8	0	0	202
Grand Total	1430	117	1	0	1548

In summary, the table 10 highlights that polling stations across all electoral districts maintain a high standard of neutrality, with minimal variation between districts and virtually no evidence of critically compromised environments. This suggests that the placement and selection of polling stations in Sri Lanka largely support free, fair, and unbiased electoral participation.

4.2.3 Policy Implications from Neutrality Findings

1. The need for continuous monitoring and proactive site selection strategies

The consistently high levels of neutrality observed across districts provide strong evidence of the Election Commission’s commitment to maintaining impartial electoral environments. However, the presence of moderately neutral locations, particularly in more densely populated and politically active districts, highlights the need for continuous monitoring and proactive site selection strategies.

2. PSNI as practical decision - Support Tool

The PSNI can serve as a practical decision-support tool for future electoral planning, enabling the identification of at-risk locations, prioritization of alternative venues, and development of clear operational guidelines to further strengthen electoral integrity.

3. Political Neutrality during Election period

The survey was conducted during the post election period. As per the guidelines ECSL usually removes political party offices within 500m parameter from a polling station, hence the political neutrality is maintained within the polling period and immediately before that during the cooling period.

4. Neutrality parameters in GN pre- election audit

It is recommended that Neutrality parameters needed to be included in the GN pre poll audit , and furthermore district level agreements by the contesting political parties and independent groups/candidates to maintain politically neutral polling stations and surroundings to maintain peaceful environment within the particular electoral district.

4.3 Polling Station Manageability and Its Relevance

Polling station manageability refers to the extent to which a polling station is adequately equipped, organized, and supported to ensure the smooth, secure, and efficient conduct of electoral processes. It encompasses key dimensions such as the physical infrastructure of the polling location, the availability of essential facilities, and the level of operational support provided to election staff. A manageable polling station can safely accommodate voters, maintain orderly voter flow, securely handle election materials, and provide a conducive working environment for polling officials. Conversely, poorly managed polling stations may experience overcrowding, logistic inefficiencies, security vulnerabilities, and disruptions that can compromise both voter experience and electoral integrity.

The concept of manageability is linked to broader frameworks of electoral integrity and election administration quality. According to international institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance, effective polling arrangements are essential to ensure transparency, accessibility, and credibility in elections. Similarly, Pippa Norris emphasizes that the quality of election administration, including polling station conditions, directly influences public trust and confidence in democratic processes (Norris, 2014).

From an operational perspective, well-managed polling stations contribute to minimizing delays, reducing voter congestion, and ensuring that electoral procedures are followed consistently. Research highlights that inadequate infrastructure and poor logistical planning can lead to long queues, voter frustration, and even disenfranchisement, particularly among vulnerable groups (ACE Electoral Knowledge Network, 2012; IDEA, 2016). In addition, the availability of basic facilities such as electricity, sanitation, and secure storage is critical for maintaining the secrecy and integrity of the ballot, which are fundamental principles of democratic elections.

The relevance of polling station manageability is particularly significant in developing country contexts, where disparities in infrastructure and service provision can affect the uniformity of election administration. Studies by the United Nations Development Programme (2019) indicate that strengthening local-level election infrastructure and operational capacity is essential for improving electoral outcomes and enhancing institutional credibility. Moreover, well-managed polling stations support inclusivity by ensuring that all voters, including elderly persons and persons with disabilities, can access and participate in the voting process without barriers.

In this context, Polling Division Manageability Index (PSMI) provides a systematic and evidence-based approach to assess and compare polling station conditions. Such measures enable election authorities to identify gaps, prioritize resource allocation, and implement targeted interventions aimed at improving election management. Ultimately, improving polling station manageability contributes to strengthening democratic governance by ensuring that elections are conducted in a free, fair, and efficient manner.

4.3.1 Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI)

The Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI) was developed to assess whether polling stations possess the necessary capacity, infrastructure, and operational support required for the smooth administration of elections. Effective election management requires polling stations that can safely accommodate voters, securely store election materials, and provide adequate facilities for polling staff. Polling stations that lack appropriate infrastructure, have limited physical capacity, or insufficient operational support may experience logistical challenges, security risks, and operational disruptions on election day. By systematically measuring these conditions, the PSMI enables election administrators to identify polling stations that require infrastructure improvements, enhanced logistical arrangements, or relocation to ensure efficient election management.

The PSMI is calculated as a composite measure integrating two key sub-dimensions of polling station manageability:

- Infrastructure Index (I): Evaluates the physical condition of polling station buildings and the availability of essential facilities such as electricity, ventilation, and secure storage for election materials.
- Operational Support Index (S): Assesses the availability of operational facilities required for election staff, including accommodation, water supply, sanitation, and security arrangements.

These sub-indices are combined using a weighted aggregation approach:

$$PSMI = 0.70I + 0.30S$$

Where:

- I* = Infrastructure readiness score (0.7)
- S* = Operational support score (0.3)

4.3.2 Weighting Structure

Infrastructure is assigned a higher weight (0.70) due to its critical role in ensuring the physical safety, security, and functionality of polling stations. Adequate infrastructure is fundamental to maintaining the integrity of election materials and enabling voters to access polling stations safely. Operational support (0.30) is also essential, as it ensures that election staff can perform their duties efficiently under appropriate working conditions.

The index values range from 0 to 1, where higher scores indicate greater manageability and operational readiness of polling stations.

Table 4.3.1: Classification of Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI) Scores

PSMI Range	Category
0.76-1.00	Highly Manageable
0.51-0.75	Manageable with minor actions
0.26-0.50	Marginally Manageable
0.00-0.25	Poor Manageable

Table 4.3.2 - analysis of the Polling Station Manageability Scores across electoral districts indicates that the overall level of manageability is relatively high, with the majority of polling stations categorized as highly manageable (1,183 out of 1,549). Districts such as Nuwara Eliya (133 out of 143), Ratnapura (175 out of 202), Vanni (148 out of 173), and Trincomalee (124 out of 140) demonstrate particularly strong performance, with a very high concentration of highly manageable polling stations and minimal representation in lower categories. Similarly, Galle and Kurunegala also show consistently high levels of manageability, suggesting that infrastructure and operational support in these districts are largely adequate.

However, some districts display comparatively moderate levels of manageability. Gampaha records the highest number of moderately manageable (62) and low manageable (20) polling stations, along with the only notable presence of poorly manageable stations (5), indicating significant disparities within the district. Colombo and Moneragala also show a considerable proportion of moderately manageable stations (49 and 52, respectively), suggesting the need for targeted improvements despite generally acceptable conditions. Polonnaruwa stands out with a relatively balanced distribution between highly manageable (58) and moderately manageable (45) stations, indicating moderate infrastructure and operational readiness.

The presence of six poorly managed polling stations is limited but critical, as these represent locations with severe deficiencies. These stations are concentrated in Ja-Ela, Wattala, and Vavuniya polling divisions, with extremely low composite index values ranging from 0.0630 to 0.2480. Such low scores indicate serious shortcomings in infrastructure and operational support, which could lead to significant logistical challenges, security concerns, and disruptions during election operations.

Polling Station Accessibility Score by Electoral District

Quantitative accessibility scores for polling stations across ten electoral districts.

Overall, while the findings highlight a strong foundation of polling station manageability across most districts, the variation observed, particularly in Gampaha, Colombo, Moneragala, and Polonnaruwa suggests the need for targeted interventions. Addressing the deficiencies in poorly and moderately manageable stations is essential to ensure uniform standards, enhance operational efficiency, and strengthen the overall integrity of the electoral process

4.3.3 Policy Implications from Manageability Findings

1. Need of Institutionalised approach to monitor Managability

The findings underscore the need for a continuous and institutionalized approach to monitoring polling station manageability. The PSMI can serve as a practical decision-support tool for the Election Commission to identify infrastructure gaps, prioritize investments, and guide the selection of polling locations.

2. Targeted Interventions

Particular attention should be given to districts with higher concentrations of moderately and poorly manageable stations, where targeted interventions can significantly improve overall electoral efficiency. Establishing minimum infrastructure standards and periodic assessments can further strengthen consistency and reliability across polling stations nationwide.

4.4 Suitability of Polling Stations

The suitability of polling stations refers to the overall appropriateness of a polling location to effectively support the conduct of elections while ensuring inclusivity, neutrality, and operational efficiency. It is a multidimensional concept that integrates key aspects such as accessibility, neutrality, and manageability, ensuring that polling stations are not only physically adequate but also socially and administratively appropriate for electoral processes. A suitable polling station allows all eligible voters to access the facility without barriers, maintains a politically neutral environment free from undue influence, and possesses the infrastructure and operational capacity required for a smooth election administration.

From an electoral governance perspective, suitability is closely aligned with the principles of free, fair, and credible elections. According to the International Institute of Democracy and Electoral Assistance, polling locations must be carefully selected to ensure accessibility, safety, and neutrality, as these factors directly influence voter participation and confidence in the electoral process (IDEA, 2016). Similarly, Pippa Norris highlights that the quality of electoral administration, including the physical and operational conditions of polling stations, plays a critical role in shaping public trust and perceptions of electoral integrity (Norris, 2014).

4.4.1 Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI)

4.4.1.1 Concept and Rationale

Ensuring that polling stations provide an environment that is accessible, politically neutral, and operationally efficient is fundamental to the conduct of free, fair, and inclusive elections. Polling stations that are difficult to access, located in politically sensitive environments, or lacking adequate infrastructure may undermine voter participation, compromise electoral integrity, and create logistical challenges for election administrators.

To address these concerns, a Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) was developed to provide a systematic and evidence-based assessment of polling station conditions. The index evaluates polling stations across three critical dimensions that influence the quality of election administration: Accessibility, Neutrality, and Manageability. Together, these dimensions capture the structural, political, and operational characteristics that determine whether a polling station can effectively facilitate the voting process.

The PSSI provides a comprehensive framework for identifying polling stations that meet required standards as well as those that may require infrastructural improvements, enhanced monitoring, or relocation in order to ensure an inclusive and efficient electoral process.

4.4.2 Dimensions of Polling Station Suitability

The Polling Station Suitability Index integrates three sub-indices:

Accessibility

Accessibility refers to the physical ability of voters to reach and enter polling stations safely and conveniently. This dimension considers factors such as distance from transportation points, road conditions, terrain, building accessibility, and facilities for elderly persons and persons with disabilities. Accessible polling stations are essential to ensure equal participation opportunities for all eligible voters (ACE Electoral Knowledge Network, 2012; International IDEA, 2016; United Nations Development Programme, 2019).

Neutrality

Neutrality reflects the degree to which the polling station environment remains politically impartial and free from undue influence or intimidation. Indicators under this dimension examine the proximity of polling stations to political party offices, previous campaign activities in the vicinity, ownership neutrality of polling locations, historical reports of intimidation, and contextual factors that may affect voter confidence in the impartiality of the polling environment (International IDEA, 2016; Pippa Norris, 2014).

Manageability

Manageability assesses the operational readiness and infrastructural capacity of polling stations to conduct election activities efficiently and securely. This includes the structural condition of buildings, availability of electricity and ventilation, safe storage facilities for election materials, and the availability of basic operational support for polling staff, such as accommodation, water supply, sanitation facilities, and security arrangements (ACE Electoral Knowledge Network, 2012; International IDEA, 2016; United Nations Development Programme, 2019).

Together, these three dimensions provide a holistic assessment of polling station conditions that affect both voter access and the operational effectiveness of election administration.

4.4.3 Construction of the Polling Station Suitability Index

Three sub-indices were first calculated:

- Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI)
- Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI)
- Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI)

Each index was constructed using a set of observable variables collected through the Polling Station Assessment Tool. Within each dimension, variables were assigned normalized weights based on their relative importance in influencing polling station conditions. The weighted variables were then aggregated to produce the respective sub-index scores.

The three sub-indices were subsequently combined to construct the Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) using a weighted linear aggregation method.

4.4.4 Weighting Structure

The weighting scheme reflects the relative importance of each dimension in determining overall polling station suitability.

Table 4.4.1: Weights of Polling Station Assessment Dimensions

Dimension	Weight
Accessibility (PSAI)	0.5
Neutrality (PSNI)	0.125
Manageability (PSMI)	0.375

Accessibility receives the highest weight because the ability of voters to physically access polling stations directly affects voter participation. Manageability is assigned the second highest weight as it determines the operational readiness of polling stations for conducting elections. Neutrality, while critically important for electoral integrity is assigned a slightly lower weight because risks associated with neutrality can often be mitigated through monitoring and administrative safeguards.

4.4.5 Mathematical Formulation

The Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) is calculated as:

$$PSSI = 0.5(PSAI) + 0.125(PSNI) + 0.375(PSMI)$$

Where:

- PSAI = Polling Station Accessibility Index (0.5)
- PSNI = Polling Station Neutrality Index (0.125)
- PSMI = Polling Station Manageability Index (0.375)

The resulting PSSI values range from 0 to 1, where higher values indicate greater suitability of polling stations for conducting elections.

This composite index provides a systematic framework for comparing polling stations and identifying locations that require improvements in accessibility, infrastructure, or operational arrangements to ensure inclusive and efficient election administration.

4.4.6 Suitability Classification

To facilitate interpretation and policy application, polling stations were categorized into four levels based on their PSSI scores.

Table 4.4.2: Classification of Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) Scores

PSSI Range	Suitability Category
0.75 – 1.00	Highly Suitable
0.60 – 0.74	Moderately Suitable
0.40 – 0.59	Marginally Suitable
0.00 – 0.39	Unsuitable

Highly Suitable

Polling stations in this category perform well across accessibility, neutrality, and manageability dimensions and are considered fully suitable for conducting elections.

Moderately Suitable

These polling stations meet most requirements but may require minor improvements in infrastructure or accessibility conditions.

Marginally Suitable

Polling stations in this category show notable limitations that may affect voter access or operational efficiency and require moderate improvements.

Unsuitable

Polling stations in this category have significant deficiencies in infrastructure, accessibility, or neutrality conditions and may require major improvements or relocation before elections.

4.4.7 Significance of the Suitability Index

The Polling Station Suitability Index provides a systematic and data-driven framework for evaluating polling station conditions. The index supports election management bodies in identifying infrastructural and operational gaps, prioritizing resource allocation, and improving polling station environments to ensure inclusive, secure, and efficient electoral processes.

By integrating accessibility, neutrality, and manageability into a single composite measure, the PSSI contributes to strengthening the planning and administration of elections and enhancing voter confidence in the electoral system.

The analysis of polling station suitability across electoral districts shows a very high overall level of suitability, with the majority of polling stations classified as highly suitable (1,397 out of 1,542). This indicates that most polling locations across the country meet the required standards in terms of accessibility, neutrality, and manageability. Districts such as Ratnapura (187 out of 202), Vanni (159 out of 173), Galle (137 out of 148), and Moneragala (137 out of 156) demonstrate particularly strong performance, with a very high concentration of highly suitable polling stations and minimal presence in lower categories. Similarly, Trincomalee, Kurunegala, and Polonnaruwa show consistently high suitability levels, with no polling stations categorized as marginally suitable or unsuitable.

However, some districts exhibit relatively higher proportions of moderately suitable polling stations, indicating areas where minor improvements may be required. Gampaha (29) and Colombo (13) record the highest numbers in this category, suggesting the need for targeted enhancements despite generally strong performance. A small number of marginally suitable polling stations (13 in total) are observed across districts such as Colombo, Gampaha, Nuwara Eliya, Galle, Vanni, and Moneragala, pointing to localized deficiencies that may affect optimal functioning.

Polling Station Suitability Score by Electoral District

Importantly, no polling stations were classified as unsuitable, reflecting a satisfactory baseline standard across all districts. Overall, the findings suggest that while polling station suitability is largely adequate nationwide, focused interventions in moderately and marginally suitable locations would further strengthen uniformity, improve service delivery, and enhance the overall quality and inclusiveness of the electoral process.

4.4.8 Policy Recommendations based on Suitability Index

Based on the findings of the Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI), several policy actions can be undertaken to further strengthen the quality, inclusiveness, and efficiency of electoral processes in Sri Lanka.

1. Targeted Improvements for Moderately and Marginally Suitable Stations

Although the majority of polling stations are highly suitable, districts such as some districts show relatively higher numbers of moderately suitable stations. The Election Commission could prioritize these locations for minor infrastructure upgrades, improved accessibility features, and operational enhancements to ensure uniform standards.

2. Strengthening Accessibility for Inclusive Voting

Given that accessibility carries the highest weight in the PSSI, continued investments are essential in elder-friendly and disability-inclusive infrastructure, including ramps, clear signage, transport connectivity, and safe access routes. This is particularly important in urban congested areas and estate regions such as Nuwara Eliya.

3. Enhancing Operational Readiness

To improve manageability, policy efforts should focus on ensuring that all polling stations are equipped with basic facilities such as electricity, sanitation, water supply, and secure storage for election materials. Standard operating guidelines and pre-election audits should be strengthened to ensure consistent operational readiness.

4. Sustaining Political Neutrality through Monitoring Mechanism

While neutrality levels across the sample are generally high, continuous monitoring is necessary to maintain public trust. The Election Commission could strengthen independent monitoring systems, complaint mechanisms, and enforcement of regulations related to political influence near polling stations.

5. Institutionalizing the PSSI for Electoral Planning

The Polling Station Suitability Index may be formally integrated into the national electoral planning and evaluation framework. Regular assessments using the PSSI can guide evidence-based decision-making, including resource allocation, relocation of polling stations, and long-term infrastructure planning.

5. Conclusion

The study concludes that Sri Lanka's polling station system provides a strong foundation for conducting free, fair, and inclusive elections. The high levels of accessibility, neutrality, and manageability observed across most districts reflect the commitment of electoral institutions and stakeholders to maintaining democratic standards and public trust.

At the same time, the presence of moderately and marginally suitable polling stations underscores the importance of continuous improvement. Addressing these gaps through targeted, evidence-based interventions will be essential to enhancing the consistency and quality of electoral service delivery. Improvements in last-mile accessibility, infrastructure upgrades, and operational readiness particularly in urban, rural, and estate contexts can further strengthen voter participation and inclusiveness.

The Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) emerges as a valuable tool for electoral planning and policy formulation. Its systematic and data-driven approach enables the identification of gaps, prioritization of resources, and monitoring of progress over time. Institutionalizing such tools within the Election Commission's planning framework will support more effective and transparent decision-making.

Furthermore, the continued collaboration between the Election Commission and civil society organizations such as PAFFREL plays a critical role in ensuring accountability, transparency, and public engagement in the electoral process.

In conclusion, while Sri Lanka demonstrates a commendable level of preparedness and performance in polling station management, sustained efforts, strategic investments, and institutional coordination are essential to further enhance electoral inclusiveness, efficiency, and credibility, ensuring that every citizen can exercise their right to vote without barriers or constraints.

6. Final Recommendations

Both individual indexes of Acceptability, Neutrality and Manageability as well as the composite index of suitability shows strong positive trends across the sample, yet as the overarching goal of this initiative is to provide universal inclusivity, conducive voter experience and equal playing field for all the political actors the below listed overall recommendations are proposed for the further enhancement of the selection, gauging and custom upgrading of the polling stations.

1. Temporary measurements to Improve Accessibility

Improve accessibility by upgrading ramps, signage, and transport facilities, with special attention to elderly persons and persons with disabilities. Strengthen manageability by improving infrastructure and logistics, and by conducting regular pre-election readiness audits. Ensure neutrality through continuous monitoring and careful selection of polling locations.

2. Institutionalize Polling Station Suitability Index

At the policy level, institutionalize the Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI) as a standard decision-making tool, develop district-specific interventions, and introduce minimum national standards for polling stations.

3. Upgrading Polling station Pre Election Audit

Further strengthen the system by introducing a Polling Station Audit Tool, upgrading frequently used polling centres, identifying suitable alternative venues where necessary, and developing a GIS-based electoral planning system to support evidence-based planning.

4. District-Specific Intervention Strategies

Policy responses should be context-specific, recognizing variations across districts. For example, urban districts may require congestion and accessibility solutions, while rural and conflict-affected areas may require improvements in infrastructure and service delivery.

8.2 ANNEXURE 02 - Technical Note on threshold variations and categorization across indices (PSAI, PSNI, PSMI, PSSI)

1. Purpose of the Note

This annex provides a comprehensive methodological justification for the variation in categorization thresholds applied across the Polling Station Accessibility Index (PSAI), Polling Station Neutrality Index (PSNI), Polling Station Manageability Index (PSMI), and the composite Polling Station Suitability Index (PSSI).

While minor differences in thresholds are observed, these are intentional, empirically grounded, and methodologically justified, reflecting the structure, distribution, and operational purpose of each index.

2. Standard Categorization Framework

For PSAI and PSNI, a consistent categorization structure is applied:

Category	Range	Interpretation
High / Highly Suitable	0.80 – 1.00	Fully compliant
Moderate	0.60 – 0.79	Minor issues
Marginal	0.40 – 0.59	Moderate deficiencies
Unsuitable	0.00 – 0.39	Serious limitations

However, two indices deviate slightly:

- PSMI (Manageability): High category begins at 0.76
- PSSI (Suitability): High category begins at 0.75

3. Role of Variable Structure (Discrete vs Continuous)

A key determinant of threshold variation is the nature of variables used in index construction.

3.1 Discrete Variable Structure

Several variables—particularly in PSMI—are discrete, meaning they take fixed values:

- 1.00 → Fully adequate
- 0.50 → Partially adequate
- 0.00 → Inadequate

3.2 Illustrative Examples

Index	Variable	Coding Scheme	Interpretation
PSMI	Waiting area availability	Yes = 1, No = 0	Binary operational condition
	Staff accommodation	Adequate = 1, Partial = 0.5, None = 0	Operational readiness
	Secure storage for election materials	Ample = 1, Limited = 0.5, None = 0	Capacity constraint
	Lighting / Electricity	Functional = 1, Partial = 0.5, None = 0	Infrastructure adequacy
PSAI	Entry/Exit doors	$\geq 2 = 1$, 1 each = 0.5, constrained = 0	Accessibility constraint
	Distance to polling station	Banded categories (e.g., $\leq 50\text{m} = 1$)	Semi-discrete
PSNI	Political proximity	Yes = 0, No = 1	Binary neutrality
	Prior intimidation	Yes = 0, No = 1	Historical risk
	Religious influence	Averaged binary indicators	Limited gradation

4. Statistical Implications: Score Clustering

Due to the use of discrete and semi-discrete variables:

- Scores do not form a smooth continuum
- Instead, they cluster within specific ranges, typically 0.65–0.80
- Achieving values above 0.80 requires near-perfect conditions across all indicators

This effect is strongest in PSMI, moderate in PSNI, and least pronounced in PSAI.

5. Justification for PSMI Threshold (0.76 - 1.00)

The Manageability Index differs because:

- It combines multiple discrete operational variables
- It reflects real-world logistical constraints (space, facilities, staff support)
- Perfect conditions are rare in practice

Therefore:

- A threshold of 0.80 would be overly restrictive
- The adjusted threshold of 0.76 reflects realistic high performance

6. Justification for PSSI Threshold (0.75 - 1.00)

6.1 Composite Nature of PSSI

The PSSI is a second-order composite index defined as:

$$\text{PSSI} = 0.40A + 0.25N + 0.35M$$

Where:

- A = Accessibility (PSAI)
- N = Neutrality (PSNI)
- M = Manageability (PSMI)

Because it aggregates three sub-indices, it inherits variability from all dimensions.

6.2 Statistical Smoothing Effect

Composite indices exhibit a regression-to-the-mean effect:

- High values in one dimension are moderated by others
- Scores cluster around 0.65–0.80

Thus:

- A threshold of 0.80 would under-classify well-performing stations
- A threshold of 0.75 better captures overall suitability

6.3 Empirical Evidence from Study

- 90.6% of polling stations were classified as highly suitable
- Very few stations fell into marginal categories
- No stations were classified as unsuitable

This confirms that the threshold reflects actual field conditions rather than theoretical extremes.

6.4 Conceptual Interpretation

The 0.75 threshold represents:

A polling station that performs consistently well across accessibility, manageability, and neutrality, even if not perfect in all dimensions.

7. Comparative Summary

Index	Nature	Variable Type	Score Distribution	High Threshold	Justification
PSAI	First-order	Mixed (continuous + banded)	Smooth	0.80	Standard benchmarking
PSNI	First-order	Mostly binary	Moderate clustering	0.80	Clear neutrality conditions
PSMI	First-order	Discrete (0, 0.5, 1)	Strong clustering	0.76	Realistic operational calibration
PSSI	Second-order composite	Aggregated indices	Smoothed	0.75	Composite index adjustment

8. Methodological Justification and Consistency of Threshold Design

The variation in thresholds across indices is:

- Statistically grounded (distributional properties)
- Methodologically consistent (aligned with index construction)
- Empirically validated (based on observed data patterns)
- Consistent with international composite index practices

9. Conclusion

The adopted categorization framework ensures that all indices remain:

- Scientifically robust
- Contextually relevant
- Operationally meaningful

while enabling the Election Commission to make evidence-based and practical decisions regarding polling station improvements, retention, or relocation.

1. Introduction

This report presents a comprehensive collection of maps illustrating the spatial distribution of polling station indices across Sri Lanka. Developed as part of the national assessment of electoral infrastructure, the maps visually depict Accessibility, Neutrality, Manageability, and the composite Suitability Index at the polling-division level for each electoral district. By consolidating all geospatial outputs in a single volume, this report serves as a dedicated visual reference to support planning, resource allocation, and operational readiness for future elections. These maps are intended to complement the analytical assessment provided in the main technical report by offering a clear geographic representation of district-level variations and spatial patterns relevant to electoral administration.
